Sample size:

Questionnaire:

Questionnaire in English, Romanian and Russian The Romanian and Russian version was pre-tested on a sample of 50 respondents in 2 urban and 4 rural localities. For the pre-testing were selected persons of different gender, age and level of education. There were some problems with the concept: Civil Service (V141), and the items from the questions V210-V214. Civil Service: the notion is not very clear for the people and was translated in Romanian and Russian as Public Clerk. At the question about the views on themselves (V210-V214) we translated the items in such a way so that the meaning remain the same and the subjects understand them. We modified V213 I see myself as a part of the European Union into the item European. At the question referring to trust in institutions were included the items A1 after V146, A2 and A3 after V147. A4 about the view on themselves and how they relate to the world was placed after V213. And the questions from A5 to A27 were placed before the demographics.

Sample:

Independent Sociological and Information Service OPINIA designed to carry out World Value Survey in Moldova using the multi-staged, stratified and probabilistic sample representative by the adult population of the republic. For developing of survey sample was used the last census data carried out in 2004 by National Bureau of Statistics. Sample was distributed for the stratum proportionally with the population volume, so was used approximately the same survey fraction in every stratum. For municipality Chisinau was designed a separate sample. At the first stage of sampling design was calculated the proportion of population living in each region (inclusively urban and rural) in the total of population of the republic. Each region was divided in administrative-territorial units / counties and was calculated the proportion of population living in these units. Starting with this data general amount of sampling was distributed among the singled out stratum in proportion with the share of the adult population in every strata, inclusively in urban and rural area. At the second stage of the sampling design were selected concrete urban and rural settlements (cities and villages) for the survey. The cities and villages were selected by random choice in every stratum from the number of all the inhabited locations included in this strata, the probability was proportional to the adult population, inhabiting these locations. Selected settlements represented on the one hand the structure (typology) of the urban and rural settlements of Moldova and, on the other hand, represented each of the counties singled out at the first stage of sampling design. At the third stage in each settlement was selected the necessary number of sampling points (routes). Sampling population was divided in accordance with administrative sectors of the city / village. In each district (sector) randomly was selected the necessary number of sampling points proportionally with population living in these sectors. At the third stage were selected concrete households by using random route method with a statistical step. At the fourth stage were selected respondents for conducting interviews. For the selection of concrete questioned subjects, within the selected households, was used the method of the nearest anniversary. If the respondent was not available at the first visit, interviewers had made three visits in different days and at different times to interview this person. If after three visits, respondent could not be found, interviewer passed to the next household, but is not allowed to interview another person from the same family.

Remarks about sampling:

For the selection of concrete questioned subjects, within the selected households, was used the method of the nearest anniversary. Regional representation of the Republic of Moldova (North, Center and South); Administrative-territorial division of the republic; Residential area: urban / rural; Size of urban localities (3 types); Size of rural localities (3 types).

Survey procedure:
